RE: Bear Lake Log Homes and Reid Stewart, contractor

To Whom It May Concern:

This is one of the happiest letters of recommendation we have ever written. Reid Stewart built our home in Bear Lake this past year and we couldn't be happier. It is beautiful and we sincerely cannot think of a thing we would change about it.

When we began looking for a contractor we were concerned because almost everyone we talked to was very unhappy with either their contractor, how long the process took, or the end quality. One of the first things that impressed us about Reid was that everyone that he had built a home for is still his friend. Really friends, not just acquaintances. We too, have become great friends with Reid and hope to remain so for a long time.

Reid is a really good man and involved in many good things. The first time we met him, he was helping out with a project, just being a good neighbor. He was always honest with us. Once he told us how much something would cost, that's what it cost. The bills were just what he said they would be. Our cabin was more expensive than we originally planned, but the results are very worth it. We always felt like Reid was very upfront about everything. He always communicated if there had been a problem, even if he had already fixed it. If something needed to be changed, he immediately contacted us about it and we worked out a solution. If we decided we wanted something different than what Reid had suggested, he did what we asked.

We were also very impressed with how hard Reid and his crew worked. Many days we arrived in below freezing temperatures and they were all hard at work. They worked all day, day after day, in temperatures that we could hardly stand for one hour. The building site was always clean, even when we arrived unexpectedly. Reid was concerned about his workers' safety and ours, so things were always tidy and "buttoned down" to prevent accidents. He also was willing to work with subs that we chose over some of his own. And he worked with us through some really unusual problems without complaining.

Reid was always willing to go the extra mile, to make things just a little nicer. He has great suggestions and we learned that when he made one, we should take it. He was easy to work with, happy, and willing to do whatever he could to please us.

We highly recommend him to anyone needing a contractor for a large or small project. You are welcome to call us for more details.

Sincerely,
